Giants of Starry Space. One of the most beatiful stars in the sky, and one that has been admired in every age of the world, is the star called Vega in the constellation of the Lyre. It is remarkable for the exceedingly delicate tint of blue in its light. This star may be seen almost directly overhead at midnight in the middie of the summer, and with its soft redi ance it forms one of the most charming features of the celestial landscapes at that season. In the early winter evenings it flashes low in the northwest. But, when we look at Vega through the megascopic eyes of the parallax hunter, it changes from a delicately beautiful star to a most porten-tous Cyclops of space. The distance of Ve ga, according to Dr. Elkin's measurement, is about nicety seven light years, or more than eix million times the distance of the sun. But the amount of light that reaches the earth from Vega is about one-forty thousand millionth part of the amount that we get from the sun, and since we know that light varies inversely as the square of the distance, it is easily seen that Vega real-ly pours forth more light than nine hundred guas like ours combined! It's heat is undoubtedly in the same proportion, so that if the earth should come as near to Vega as it is to the sun we should wither into cinders before the firce blue gush of its overpowerog rays. If Vega is the centre of a system of worlds, they must either revolve at enor mous distances from it, or else their inhabi ants must possess the heat-defying powers of salamanders

But we can go on to a sill mightier orb han Vega. Let your eye run along the bending handle of the Great Dipper, and, following the same curve beyond the last star in the handle, sweep across the sky un til it is arrested by a bright golden yellow star of the first magnitude. This is the fa-mous Arcturus, celebrated among men since Job's time at least. The striking color of the star, its brillancy, and its solitary situa tion as if withdrawn into a place apart from the general host of heaven, all combine to make it a cynosure of the northern sky. Arcturus has yielded a parallax within the past year that places it at the distance of no less than 180 light-years, or 11,400,000 times as far as the sun. It follows that Arcturus is equal in radiating power to more than 3 000 suns like ours. It is but fair to say that other estimates of the light received from the star make Arctrus qual to at least 6,000 sups! Yet Arcturus may be surround. ed by planets too, but how shall we form a conception of the life forces, the physical powers, the unnumbered activities of organ ized existence in operation within the bazas precincts of such a solar system as that?

Astronomy has long since accustomed us to think of the earth as an insignificant atom of creation, but in the presence of this Arcof creation, but in the presence of this Arcturian wonder our whole planetary system, with the glorious orb that ights and governs it, fades away before our exalted vision nto a flicker of fireflies against the dark

Even the Pole star, that speck of light in moonless nights that sailors have steered their ships by, is a sun nearly a hundred times as luminous as ours. The marvellous "runaway star," that astronomers have dis-covered under the bowl of the Great Dipper, a star that is flying through space so fast that nobody can imagine how it got started or where it is going, although it is far too small to be visible to the naked eye, is yet thirty times as great an illuminator of space as the sun; and who shall say that it does not bear with it in its flight orbs that play as great a part in the scheme of creation and of life as that which Satan detected:

"—fast by, hanging in a golden chain, This pendant world in bigness as a star Of smallest magnitude, close by the moon."

If we wish to behold afar off a sun equal to ours, we must turn to the southern heav-ens, to the constellation of Ophiuchus, where, in a little fifth-magnitude star that the eye would probably overlook but for the fact that several other faint twinklers grouped near it combine their feeble rays to catch the sight, we may look upon the peer of the blazing day god that rules our tract of space. Thus would he be diminished in glory if removed to a corresponding distance.
